Excels Last Year's Attendance, [Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Williamsburg, Va., September 20.— Ten more men have matriculated at William and Mary than on the second day of the session last year, and there are many more here who have not reported to the registrar. It is estimated that there are from 200 to 250 men here. All the dormitories are filled, and students are being sent out in town to board. It is thought that William and Mary will have a larger attesdance than for many years. There are students here from Pennsylvania. New York, Indians, North Carolina, Texas, Ohio and the New England States.

Blacksburg. Va., September 19.—
The Virginia Polytechnic Institute opened for the first term of the session 1912-13 on Wednesday morning with over 400 students on the grounds. Until the work of registration is completed it is impossible to state the attendance definitely, and the above fewers are based on the number of baggage handled by the company. The majority of those here now are new men, and the former students will con-tinue to come in until next Monday then class work starts.

The remainder of this week is given when class work starts.

The remainder of this week is given up to matriculation, rooming of the cadets and the usual routine of the opening days. The Y. M. C. A had the annual "college night" this evening when a formal welcome was extended the new men by the association, the faculty and townspeople. More students have been assigned rooms than on the first day of the session for several years, and there is every indication that the attendance for the year will be above that of last. Many of the new cadets have been accompanied here by their parents or friends, and the latter have been much interested in inspecting the college in all its departments.

Charles Jerningham is a younger brother of Sir Hubert Jerningham, the former diplomat, former colonial governor and former Member of Parliament As a young Attache of the British Embassy at Paris, Sir Hubert was one of the most successful of that brilliant troupe of amateur actors and actresses who under the leadership of the Austrian Ambassadress, Princess Pauline Metternich, not only occupied the stage of the private theatres of the imperial palaces of the Tuiteries, of St. Cloud, of Fontainebleau, and of Complegne, but who virtually led the revels at the gay court of Napoleon III. and Empress Eugenie during the closing years of their reign. ing years of their reign.

Hubert Jerningham's success was du-ot only to his complete command of he French language — he was the French language—he was graduated from a Paris instead of from an English university—but likewise to his remarkable historionic ability and tastes, which latter may be said to have pursued him through his entire career. For when Governor of Mauritius and of other British dependencies, he was in the habit of giving dramatic entertainments, mostly in the nature of farces of his own authorship, and where he fulfilled the duties of stage manager, nothing but the necessity of maintaining unimpaired the lofty dignity of his office, as representative of the sovereign, preventing him from 2p-

There is no truth in the stories printed in the English weekly papers to the effect that the Duke and Duchess of Portland entertained a large party at Welbeck Abbey for the Doncaster races. The duke has carefully refrained from giving any house party for the Doncaster races since a memorable incident which occurred some twenty years ago. The late King Edward, then Prince of Wales, had notified him that he would like to stay at Welbeck Abbey for the races and accordingly all preparations were made to welcome the then heir apparent in a fitting manner. In accordance with the requirements of etiquette, the duchess sent to the prince a list of the guests whom she proposed Brooke at Welbeck Abbey. In this she was backed up by her husband. The prince, very indignant, thereupon announced that he would not honor Welbeck Abbey with his presence.

On learning of this, Mrs. Arthur Wilson wrote to the prince begging him to stay at Tranby Croft for the race week, and at the same time making him aware that she would be delighted to welcome under her roof there anybody whom he might like to be included in the house party. Lady Brooke was invited, and was actually on her way to Tranby Croft, when at York If you see a State referred to by a nickname, look in the book and see what
